Pressures have been mounting for years, but escalated into violence last summer when environmentalists stepped up their activism.

In June, Earth First! organizer Greg King was punched and knocked to the ground during a demonstration at a Louisiana-Pacific mill north of Ukiah. In August, a logger slugged activist Mem Hill, breaking her nose. A few days later, a logging truck rammed into the back of Earth First! spokeswoman Judi Bari's car, with her two young daughters and another activist's children inside.

Insufficient evidence
Authorities said there was insufficient evidence in two of the incidents to warrant prosecution. A man later pleaded guilty to slugging King.

"That's what we were facing before we called for Mississippi Summer in the Redwoods," said Bari of Earth First!, who said she has received several death threats in recent months.

Since its founding in 1980, Earth First! has advocated sabotaging logging equipment and driving long metal spikes into trees to scare away loggers. Members call themselves eco-warriors. Critics call them terrorists.

In sounding the nationwide call for Redwood Summer, Earth First! members on the North Coast have times. There will even be protest songs to learn and sing.

A tape written mainly by Earth First! troubadour Darryl Cherny called "They Sure Don't Make Hippies Like They Used To" includes such songs as "You Can't Clearcut Your Way to Heaven," "Knocking on Extinction's Door" and "Spike a Tree For Jesus." Although Earth First! has been accused of spiking trees around the country to thwart logging, the group said spiking will not be condoned during Redwood Summer.

As proof of their peaceful intent, Earth First! members point to the endorsement of their plans by San Francisco-based Seeds of Peace and Brian Willson of the Center for the Practice of Non-violence. Willson, a Vietnam War veteran, lost his legs in 1967 when he was run over by a train at the Concord Naval Weapons Station during a blockade to protest the war in El Salvador.

Lynch mob mentality
"He's done what we're going to do — put his body on the line in a non-violent blockade," said Bari of Earth First! "There's this lynch mob mentality being whipped up. We need to let them know this is not just Earth First!"

But so far, mainstream environmental groups have not endorsed Redwood Summer.

Lucas, head of the Sierra Club's State Forest Practices Task Force, issued a statement last month saying that the Sierra Club did not support the idea because of its potential for violence. A week later, leaders of the club's Redwood Chapter denounced her stance, saying they "respect and appreciate our Earth First! friends and what they are trying to accomplish."

The Sierra Club is expected to take a formal stand early next month. Others already have signed on, saying they will welcome the students and put them to work, too.

"They aren't coming here to get into a battle or a war with the timber industry," said Rondal Snodgrass, a civil rights activist in Mississippi in 1964 who now serves as executive director of Sanctuary Forest, a non-profit land trust.

"They're coming because they want to help. I got one call from a Catholic college and another from an Episcopal minister, who said several people are interested in coming."

Law enforcement and some loggers are hoping no one comes. But if crowds do appear, both camps say they'll be ready.

"If they stand in my way and try to stop me, there's going to be violence," said Gary Miner of Willits, an independent logging truck driver. "I've got a wife and three kids, and they come first."

Others have made similar comments, although privately, some loggers say they support what the environmentalists are trying to do: slow down the harvesting.

"I have children and I want them to be able to work in the woods," said one logger who asked that his name not be used to protect his job. "A lot of people are really concerned if there will be any jobs in five or 10 years at the rate the companies are cutting. Everybody feels that way, but they're afraid to say it or they'll lose their jobs tomorrow."

Law enforcement officials are more worried about this summer — not tomorrow.

Actions surrounding Earth Day last month don't make them feel any better. Some time in the night or early morning of April 22-23, activists sabotaged PG&E transmission lines in Santa Cruz County. The previously unknown Earth Night Action Group claimed responsibility for the action and threatened further sabotage against corporate earth rapists.

Numerous Earth First! spokesmen said their group was not involved and will not take similar action on the North Coast.

"We're just hoping and praying we don't get all these college kids," said Fortuna Police Chief Lee Evanson.

For the past month, police and sheriff's deputies in the Redwood Empire have been meeting to discuss how they will control the crowds and keep the peace at the mass protests that are expected.

"There's lots of potential for violence due to the protesters' mindset and their dedication for their cause and the fact that the loggers depend on their livelihood in logging," said Lt. Jay Miller, spokes-

Earth First! activist Marc Labelle, above left, Jessica Bari and Earth First! spokeswoman Judi Bari protest an asphalt plant built in a residential area of Ukiah. Terri and Mark Wright, left, who drove out from Austin, Texas, to join the Redwood Summer sit outside their cabin in the woods with their dog Max.

Texas said they "knew the hazards" when they quit their jobs as a landscape foreman and clerk at a drug and rehabilitation clinic in Austin and came to California a month ago. They say saving the redwoods is worth the risk.

"We saw some pictures of clear-cutting and some pictures of a pristine forest," Mark Wright said. "I put them beside each other and it blew me away. We just want to help in any way we can."

...of 1,000 such polysyllabic words in preparation for his 10th year as the pronouncer at Scripps Howard National Spelling Bee in Washington. These words will be hurled at 220 hapless contestants from across the United States on May 31.

Phrenicectomy (fren-uh-SECK-tuh-mee), which course means surgical removal of a phrenic nerve to secure collapse of a diseased lung, was awarded in the bee a few years ago, he said. He didn't remember if anyone got it right.

Amerson said some contestants were stumped by "acalculia" (a-cal-CUE-lee-uh), lack or loss of ability to perform simple arithmetical tasks. How to avoid such appalling mediocrity in spelling?

Memorizers rattle off words rather casually, later they disappear rather quickly," advised great enunciator. "That's the point at which people who have read a lot and have sense of the pe of words, the basic roots, make it."

Judy Carne arrested on old drug warrant

Actress Judy Carne was arrested at New York's Kennedy International Airport on an 11-year-old warrant discovered by customs agents, officials said Saturday.

Carne, who gained fame in the 1960s as the "back-it-to-me" star of television's "Laugh-In," was arrested at about 7:30 p.m. Friday, said Lt. Arthur Teet, a Port Authority Police spokesman.

Carne was checking in with the U.S. Customs Service, having just returned from abroad, when the warrant was discovered, Sweet said. The warrant from Hamilton County, Ohio, sought Carne on charges of drug abuse and illegal possession of drug documents.

From the airport, she was taken to Queens Central booking but was then transferred to City Hospital Center in Elmhurst when she became ill, Teet said.

ationery, the letter noted that Patti had done "the right thing" by turning herself in for smoking.

"If we could pay for rule breaking just by confessing it, there wouldn't be much law and order. In the Bible we can read where Jesus heard confessions and promised forgiveness but on the condition that we would go forth and not commit the sin again," again wrote.

"Would you be happy if you weren't sure that I was quite honest? Would you be comfortable if I had to wonder whether you would believe things I said? Or if perhaps now you had to worry that maybe I was being dishonest in this job—that one day the paper would carry a story exposing me as a law breaker?"

The letter is signed "Love, Dad."

mrs. Bush, the subject of the magazine's cover story, recalled how depression overtook her when she and her husband, George, returned to the United States after two years in China.

Bush had been the U.S. liaison officer in Beijing and the couple had been together much of the time. But that changed drastically when Bush returned to become director of the CIA.

She said depression preyed on her mind. "And I would think bad thoughts, I will tell you. It was not nice," she said.

Her remedy was to volunteer for service work in the Washington Home, a health-care center for the seriously ill. In that role she performed chores

"For a while after Robin died, I played with my children all of the time," she said. "I heard little George out the window saying, 'I can't play with you today. I have to go to my mother.' And that's when I threw into the league project."

Calling on wealthy friends for contributions and spreading the news among the poor, she worked with a forerunner of the Junior League to establish a thrift shop to help clothe the needy.

Mrs. Bush also worked at Midland Memorial Hospital, giving baths to patients and rubbing their backs.

Redwood Empire residents open homes to activists

forests, people are finally realizing that it's happening here, too.

The planned protests come at a time when tensions between lumber companies and environmentalists are at their highest in decades. Three forest initiatives — two backed by environmentalists and the other by the timber industry — will be on the November ballot. And the industry remains under fire for stepping up exports and accelerating cutting of forests, including 1,000-year-old redwoods and Douglas firs.

Recently released figures from the state, for example, reveal that lumber companies in Mendocino County last year logged at a rate that was 320 percent greater than replanted forests were growing.

A logging frenzy?

"We expect that to rise to 400 percent this year as a result of what some call a logging frenzy, a logging boom so great that loggers and truck drivers are coming from as far away as Idaho and Colorado to meet the demand," said Gall

Lucas, head of the Sierra Club's pledged to give up those tactics. Instead, they say they have focused on ways to keep the summer calm.

In packets of information sent to 450 colleges around the country, they have warned students not to bring dogs, weapons, drugs or alcohol. Those who come don't expect things like tree-sitting, tree hugging, log road blockades, banner hanging and picketing. According to Redwood Summer packets, And while some actions may involve mass arrests, like a group of people sitting down in a road and refusing to move, students also will be needed for stream restoration and other rehabilitation projects in the heavily logged forests, the packets say.

All participants will be given non-violence training and must agree to a code that prohibits damaging property or people, spokesmen said.

As word has gotten out, residents from Ukiah all the way up the coast to Crescent City in Del Norte County have offered to open their homes to forest freedom riders. A base camp will open in about two weeks, when many stu-
